	Find an example of each of the following in a story on the front page: byline, cutline, dateline and headline.	Expand your vocabulary by scanning the newspaper for unfamiliar words, then find and write the definitions in a notebook.	Find articles about area events, then use maps to calculate the mileage among these.	Find stories from the summer that mention rainfall amounts or drought. Was your area impacted by either?	Were you a citizen scientist this summer? If so, report your observations in the journalistic style.

	Use the newspaper's index to find the pages for classified ads, sports, local news and editorials.	Pick several pictures, cut out or print these, put them in random order, then write a story that weaves the pictures together.	Find 5 ads that have a unit price for items, such as 2 tacos for $4. Calculate the price per individual item.	Read about upcoming Labor Day activities, then create a map showing the locations.	Select an article about a science topic, then list the facts to see if the conclusion is supported in the story.
